

film reviews

Heath Ledger and Jake Gyllenhaal in Brokeback Mountain

UNHAPPY TRAILS Brokeback Mountain

review by George Saxt

A new biography of Zane Grey, whose prolific output of Western novels made him the best-selling American writer in the first forty years of the last century, quotes a line from one of his books: "All the cowboys had secrets."

Brokeback Mountain, Ang Lee's new, widely remarked-on and much-heralded new film, is about two cowboys who share a secret, though presumably not the kind Grey had in mind. The chronological and qualitative gaps between Grey's work, now largely forgotten, and Lee's film, broadly described as "the gay cowboy movie," may seem vast, but there are thematic and historical links.

The emphasis of much of the expectant commentary is on the movie's homoerotic element, but it's hard to believe the same breadth and intensity of interest would have developed if Brokeback Mountain didn't involve cowboys, and didn't entail, however obscurely, the old mythos of the American West. Its luster isn't what it was when writers like Grey and Owen Wister were helping to embroider and commercialize it, and Hollywood was working its shopworn magic, but it still retains some potency. It's been ingrained in the American ideology of proud individualism, and it operates its oppressive, semi-delusional effects on the movie's two young men. (The cowboy mystique, somewhat vulgarly glamorized, has also exerted an attraction for gay men, as two unusually well-educated and perceptive members of that population reminded me the other day.)

Jack Twist (Jake Gyllenhaal) and Ennis Del Mar (Heath Ledger) are the two very young ranch hands who begin an unexpected, passionate and inexpedient relationship early in the movie. It's a liaison that soon enough becomes disturbing and frustrating, and, ultimately, is deeply tragic.

Just as in the Annie Proulx short story the movie is based on, the boys meet when they're hired to herd sheep on the titular Wyoming mountain over the summer of 1963. Both nineteen, on their own in Wyoming and barely scraping by, they initially bond over their joint isolation and hardship, and their common youth; before long, their shared loneliness, longing and need pull them together personally and sexually. But in August, as their employment ends and the dreary conventions of their lives reassert their sway, they laconically part.

When Jack reconnects with Ennis, four years have passed and both of them have married and become parents. Although the more adventurous, less guilt-ridden Jack argues for hightailing it away from their individual responsibilities toward a life together on a little ranch somewhere, Ennis can't envision such a future. So, over the next decade and a half, they meet once or twice a year for "fishing trips." In between, each suffers their years of separation in secret distress and almost unrequited yearning. "If you can't fix it, you got to stand it," Ennis advises during their first hungry reunion.

This central narrative structuring makes possible much of the film's affecting impact and also its somewhat arbitrary quality. Their secretive romance in mutual absentia amounts to an artistic device or conceit that is quietly at odds with the movie's carefully rendered, windswept natural settings as well as the dismal kitchen-sink realism of hard-scrabble cow town life.

To be sure, some of this contrasting is liberate. Lee and cinematographer Rodrigo Prieto have meticulously composed a series of grandly-scaled outdoor scenes for the men's activities together and apart. Rarely, if ever, has an American film made nature such a compelling presence since the salad days of director John Ford. This serves to tie the two men to their geography and society (although the filmmakers do seem to have missed an opportunity to visually translate a sentence in Proulx's story that describes Jack and Ennis spying signs of each other's proximity across a great expanse of Brokeback's face, first in daylight, then after nightfall.)

The story's almost abstract patterning of the men's relationship isn't without power, but you may be conscious, during the movie or afterward, of a schematicism. The beginning of their liaison may seem more persuasive than its playing out.

Novelist and screenwriter Larry McMurtry (The Last Picture Show, Lonesome Dove) bought the rights to the story shortly after it was published by the New Yorker in 1997.

To respond to any of the film reviews, e-mail artvoicefilm@aol.com or write to: Artvoice, 810 Main Street, Buffalo, NY 14202

ALL HOLIDAY
MERCHANDISE
20% OFF

save an additional 20% off by mentioning this ad (offer expires Jan 10th)

"Where History & Charm Surround You"
Marjim Manor a must-see stop on the Niagara Wine Trail!

Spectacular Wines Historic Building
Fabulous Location Ghostly Legends

OPEN FOR WINE TASTING
MON~SAT 10~TO 6~SUNDAY NOON TO 6~

Margo Sue Bittner, owner and operator visit one of the two "Women Owned Wineries" in New York State

7171 E. LAKE ROAD APPLETON, NY
716.778.7001
check our website for upcoming events...
www.MarjimManor.com

Record Baron
"Home of One the Record Man"

LARGEST SELECTION IN WNY OF Mint quality

ALWAYS BUYING!
• Vinyl Albums & 45s,
• Tapes, Memorabilia,
• 1000s of CDs

Haiku II NOW AVAILABLE

Monday-Thursday 11am-7pm
Friday 11am-8pm • Saturday 11am-6pm
CLOSED SUNDAY
3048 Delaware Ave. Kenmore, NY
871-8722

Where The City
Smokes

Lounge,
Billard Table,
Free Coffee,
Great Service,
Unmatched
Selection

VIRGIL
AVE
TOBACCONIST

Voted
Buffalo's Best
Tobacconist

11AM - 10PM Mon.-Sat.

12PM - 6PM Sun.

6 Virgil Avenue, (just off Hertel)
873-6461

A new era in aesthetic enhancement.

- BOTOX
- RADIESSE
- CAPTIQUE
- LIPOSUCTION
- THERMAGE
- CONTOUR THREADS
- PHOTO REJUVENATION
- HAIR TRANSPLANT
- FAT TRANSPLANT

RIYAZ HASSANALI, MD

811 MAPLE ROAD WILLIAMSVILLE NEW YORK 716.626.1593

www.drhassanali.com

He had to wait another seven years before he could get a project moving forward with a screenplay written by him and producer Diana Ossana.

Adapting a novel frequently requires difficult decisions about compression, winnowing and rewriting. The movie follows Proulx's story closely, but she breezes over the nearly twenty years of the men's experiences, stopping only briefly at crucial turning points, referring to others after they've passed, and interjecting authorial insights and comments at various junctures. Her writing works to convey personal desolation and a subdued but insistent "lesson." The screenwriters had to create most of the middle eighty or so minutes of the movie from what amount to several references and sketchy descriptions. The original story reflects Ennis' experience and point-of-view much more than Jack's, and the movie does a fair job of amplifying Jack's life and character, but sometimes it seems to be marking time until it can return to Proulx's original material. And in at least a couple of scenes, it edges toward, or into, soap opera.

Gyllenhaal makes the most of his uneven opportunities, more than many young actors could have. In one scene where the boss of the sheep outfit (an effective Randy Quaid) contemptuously makes clear his awareness of what the two boys were doing with each other on Brokeback, Gyllenhaal's cowed, stricken, boyish visage is poignantly expressive.

But Ledger's Ennis, almost of necessity, occupies the center of the movie, and it's one of the most surprisingly accomplished performances in a long time. The actor makes Ennis' wounded, confused pride and sometimes almost apologetic reticence bespeak a crude, stubborn nobility. Much of the movie's impact depends on Ledger's apparent conviction and understated interpretive skill.

Brokeback Mountain develops the quality of a mournful fable. It finally transcends its own awkward passages and didactic limitations. av

Sienna Miller and Heath Ledger in Casanova

MY LIFE AS A PUPPY

Casanova

review by M. Faust

There are two ways to look at Giacomo Casanova, the 18th century Venetian whose legend retains a hold on our imagination two centuries after his death. There is the real Casanova, whose eleven volumes of memoirs seem barely sufficient to contain his exploits as a diplomat, a politician, and a spy; a musician and a writer; a Freemason and a cleric; and a swordsman, in both senses of the word. That his biography isn't entirely trustworthy only adds to his allure.

Or you can regard him for the trait with which his name has become synonymous, as history's greatest lover, the man whom no woman could resist. Plenty of softcore fantasies have been spun about the latter, but aside from Fellini's 1976 film with Donald Sutherland as an aging sexual obsessive given to bouts of mechanical fornication, few have shown much interest in the real man.

Lasse Hallström's Casanova is so lacking in bawdiness that it barely earns its R rating. But after seeing it, you still won't know Giac. Concentrating on a fictional incident in the life of Casanova at the age of 28, it uses a dash of historical fact (Casanova's run-in with the Spanish Inquisition, which sought to execute him as a warning against immorality) as the basis for a romantic farce. Heavy on pretty costumes and prettier actors, it aspires to be a popular updating a la Tom Jones, Richard Lester's Three Musketeers films, or Shakespeare in Love, but it is no more grounded than the hot air balloon that figures prominently in the story.

Without detailing the multiple impersonations and mistakes of identity that move the film along, suffice to say that Casanova (Heath Ledger, more prominently on display this week in Brokeback Mountain), compelled to take a wife, finds one suitable to him in the person of Francesca Bruni (Sienna Miller), a protofeminist who wields a mean sabre and who writes (under a nom du plume) subversive tracts on gender freedom. Because the movie would only be thirty minutes long if they immediately recognized each other as soul mates, much persiflage and chicanery ensues prior to an ending that at least addresses the need to redress the story's main historical inaccuracy.

The nicely dressed supporting cast includes Jeremy Irons (camping it up in a ridiculous wig as the Papal Inquisitor on the trail of both of our heroic heretics), Lena Olin (aka Mrs. Hallström) as Francesca's mother, and Oliver Platt as a Genoan lard merchant (and the subject of a lot of fat jokes unbecoming to an actor of his talents, not to mention some slapstick torture scenes that are in spectacularly poor taste at a time when our government is trying to persuade us that it has the right to torture real people).

Call me a dirty old man, but a little genuine smut would have been welcome here. Instead, all we get is a few scenes of Casanova cavorting in one of those convents that exists only in European soft porn films, and a dinner table scene swiped from Shampoo. Instead, this is a Casanova that you could take your mom to see. av

7 GOLDEN GLOBE® NOMINATIONS INCLUDING BEST PICTURE™ DRAMA

BEST DIRECTOR • ANG LEE BEST ACTOR • HEATH LEDGER
BEST SCREENPLAY • LARRY MCMURTRY & DIANA OSSANA
BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS • MICHELLE WILLIAMS

"A BIG, SWEEPING, AND RAPTUREOUS HOLLYWOOD LOVE STORY!"

It could turn out to be the most revolutionary movie of the year. A film in which love feels almost as if it were being invented."

— OWEN GLEIBERMAN, ENTERTAINMENT WEEKLY

★★★★!
UNMISSABLE AND UNFORGETTABLE!

A classic in the making. It's a landmark film and a triumph for Heath Ledger and Jake Gyllenhaal. Heath Ledger's performance is an acting miracle."

— PETER TRAVERS, ROLLING STONE

Los Angeles Film Critics Association Winner
New York Film Critics Circle Winner
Boston Society of Film Critics Winner
San Francisco Film Critics Circle Winner
Dallas-Fort Worth Film Critics Association Winner
Southeastern Film Critics Association Winner
Las Vegas Film Critics Society Winner
Utah Film Critics Association Winner
Florida Film Critics Circle Winner

BEST PICTURE

HEATH LEDGER
JAKE GYLLENHAAL

BROKEBACK MOUNTAIN

LOVE IS A FORCE OF NATURE

www.brokebackmountain.com

ARTWORK: ©2005 FOCUS FEATURES LLC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

FOCUS
FEATURES

EXCLUSIVE ENGAGEMENT STARTS FRIDAY, JANUARY 6!

DIPSON THEATRES NORTH PARK 1428 Hertel Ave. 716/836-7411

SPECIAL ENGAGEMENT

CHECK THEATRE DIRECTORY OR

NO PASSES OR DISCOUNT COUPONS ACCEPTED

CALL FOR SOUND INFORMATION AND SHOWTIMES

Share your feelings about the film, the connections you felt and how watching it might have brought back memories of your own at www.brokebackmountain.com

Don't Get Sold Out! For advance ticket sales log on to www.fandango.com or www.movietickets.com
For group sales information log on to www.brokebackmountain.com/groupsales or please call 877-BROKEBACK.

Seneca Niagara Casino & Hotel
nightlife just got ultra hot.

Hush night club and ultra lounge is bringing an upscale style of nightlife to Western New York. It's the hot new nightspot that's taking excitement to the edge. Hush is open 4 pm to 4 am Wednesday through Sunday. Exclusively at Seneca Niagara Casino & Hotel.

SENECA NIAGARA
CASINO & HOTEL

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK USA

Hush
NIGHT CLUB
ULTRA LOUNGE